Dear Parents,

As a mother, and as someone who has spent years working with thousands of young children, there is one message I would like to share with every parent.

Today's parents are deeply involved in their children's lives, and that is a beautiful thing. But sometimes, in our desire to protect them, we become overprotective. A small disagreement in the classroom, a complaint from a child, or a minor incident can quickly become a source of worry or frustration.

Children between the ages of two and six are still learning how to express themselves. They are discovering friendships, emotions, sharing, patience, and even how to solve conflicts. Every day is a learning experience. Not every tear means something is wrong, and not every complaint tells the complete story.

Whenever you have a concern, I encourage you to first have a conversation with your child's teacher. Ask questions. Listen to their observations. Most misunderstandings can be resolved through a calm discussion. When parents and teachers communicate openly, the child benefits the most.

One thing I always tell parents is this never teach your child to fear their teacher. Teach them to trust their teacher. A teacher is not just someone who teaches numbers and letters; they are someone who helps shape confidence, kindness, discipline, and values. If children see respect and trust between their parents and teachers, they feel safe and secure.

At home, let us focus on building good habits honesty, responsibility, kindness, gratitude, and resilience. Encourage your child to speak the truth, even when they make mistakes. Praise them for being honest rather than for being perfect. These values stay with them for life.

At Canvas, we don't just educate children we nurture future citizens. This journey becomes meaningful only when parents and teachers walk hand in hand, with trust, patience, and a shared purpose.

Let's choose conversation over assumptions, partnership over blame, and trust over fear. Together, we can give our children the strongest foundation they will ever need.

Building Trust A Partnership That Shapes Every Child

With warm regards,

Beyond "Just Playing": The Canvas Way of Learning

"What did you do in school today?" "I played!"

It's an answer every parent has heard, and naturally, it raises a question: "Is my child really learning?"

At Canvas International Preschool, our answer is simple—yes, because play is learning.

For many of us, learning has always been associated with desks, notebooks, worksheets, and memorisation. But research in early childhood education tells us that young learners develop best when they are actively engaged in meaningful experiences. During the first five years of life, the brain develops at an extraordinary pace, and the experiences learners have during these years shape how they think, communicate, solve problems, and understand the world around them.

This belief forms the foundation of The Canvas Way—our unique approach to early years education that nurtures the whole learner. Drawing inspiration from globally respected educational practices and guided by contemporary research, we create environments where learners are encouraged to explore, question, create, collaborate, communicate, and discover. Our educators are not simply teachers; they are facilitators who observe, listen, and thoughtfully extend each learner's thinking through purposeful interactions.

The difference between memorising and understanding can be seen in the simplest classroom moments. Imagine introducing addition. Instead of asking learners to memorise $2 + 2 = 4$, an educator joins two learners building towers with blocks and asks, "You have two blocks and your friend has two more. What happens if we put them together?" As they count "One, two, three, four," learners experience the concept of addition rather than simply memorising an equation. The same happens when learners climb the school stairs while counting upwards and then down again. Concepts such as ascending and descending order become meaningful because they are lived, not merely taught.

This is what makes learning at Canvas different. Every activity has a purpose. Every question is intentional. Every experience is designed to build understanding rather than simply recall.

At Canvas, we believe education is about much more than preparing learners for the next grade. It is about preparing them for life. That is why we intentionally nurture the 4Cs—Critical Thinking, Creativity, Collaboration, and Communication—skills that will empower learners to thrive in a world that continues to evolve. Whether learners are building with blocks, creating stories, exploring nature, solving problems together, or expressing themselves through art and movement, they are developing the confidence, curiosity, resilience, and empathy that will stay with them for years to come.

One of the biggest misconceptions about play-based learning is that learners are simply left to play. In reality, high-quality early years education is highly intentional. Behind every joyful experience is an educator who is observing, questioning, encouraging, and extending learning. Behind every game is a learning objective. Behind every exploration is an opportunity for growth.

So, the next time your child comes home and proudly says, "I played today," smile.

Because while they were playing, they were also thinking, creating, communicating, collaborating, questioning, and discovering. They were developing not only academic foundations but also the confidence, independence, and love of learning that will prepare them for the future.

At Canvas International Preschool, we don't see play as a break from learning.

We see it as the beginning of a lifetime of learning.

That is The Canvas Way.

Wall Of Wisdom:

Why “Good Behaviour” should not be the goal in early childhood

Early childhood research consistently shows that behaviour in young children is closely linked to brain development rather than intentional choice. In the first six years of life, the brain undergoes rapid growth, forming neural connections through everyday experiences and relationships. However, this development is uneven. The amygdala, a key structure involved in processing emotions such as fear and stress, is highly active early in life. In contrast, the prefrontal cortex—part of the frontal lobe responsible for impulse control, planning, and decision-making—matures gradually over childhood and adolescence. This developmental gap explains why young children often experience intense emotions without yet having the neurological capacity to regulate them effectively. Findings from developmental neuroscience, including work synthesized by institutions such as the Harvard Center on the Developing Child, emphasise that early emotional experiences and responsive caregiving play a critical role in shaping these neural systems. In classroom settings, this translates into behaviours that are often misunderstood. A child who reacts impulsively is not necessarily lacking discipline; rather, the neural circuits required for self-control are still developing. Similarly, heightened responses during transitions or unfamiliar situations can be linked to amygdala activation, as young children are biologically more sensitive to stress and novelty. The parietal lobe, which contributes to sensory integration and spatial awareness, is also in the process of refining how children interpret and respond to environmental stimuli. Research in early childhood development highlights that young children rely heavily on external regulation—through consistent routines, co-regulation with adults, and predictable environment before they can internalise these regulatory capacities themselves. Evidence from arts-integrated and multisensory learning research indicates that structured creative experiences can support this developmental process. Activities involving rhythm, movement, music, and visual expression engage multiple neural systems simultaneously, including those associated with attention, emotion, and motor coordination.

Studies in early childhood education have shown that such experiences are associated with improvements in emotional regulation, attention, and social engagement, particularly when they are embedded within consistent routines and supportive adult-child interactions. These findings align with broader developmental research demonstrating that repetition, rhythm, and multisensory engagement contribute to neural organisation and integration during early childhood. Social development is similarly grounded in these neurological processes. Skills such as turn-taking, cooperation, and empathy emerge over time as children's regulatory and cognitive systems mature. Research in arts-based and play-based learning environments suggests that collaborative activities provide natural contexts for practising these skills. Through shared creative experiences, children engage in observation, imitation, and interaction, which are essential mechanisms for early social learning. These processes support the gradual integration of emotional and cognitive functions, particularly as the prefrontal cortex develops in coordination with other brain regions. At Canvas International Preschool, our PSED approach -Personality, Social, and Emotional Development-is informed by these well-established principles of early brain development. Rather than focusing solely on academic outcomes, we observe how children express themselves, regulate emotions, and build relationships. Research consistently identifies these competencies as foundational for later learning and wellbeing. By aligning educational practices with how the young brain develops, we aim to provide an environment that supports not only learning, but also emotional security, social understanding, and long-term developmental growth.

The Soul of Canvas: Crafting Hearts and Minds Through Stories

In today's world, early childhood education is essential for every child. It provides structured, play-based, and experiential learning tailored for children aged 2 to 5. At Canvas International Preschool—India's premier ISO certified preschool chain—our focus is never on rigorous academic memorization. Instead, we cultivate holistic development across all aspects of a child's growth.

Canvas acts as a vital bridge between home life and formal primary schooling, instilling a lifelong love for learning while preparing children to thrive both academically and socially.

The Heart of Our Philosophy:

The true soul of Canvas lies in our PSED (Personal, Social, and Emotional Development) approach toward every child. To bring this philosophy to life, we integrate diverse learning methodologies, including:

- Play-based learning
- Multisensory exploration
- Inquiry-based and visual learning
- Interactive storytelling sessions

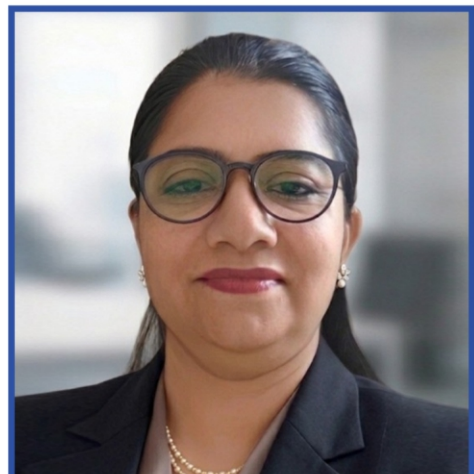

The Magic of Story Sessions

Among all our methods, Story Sessions stand out as the most interactive and beloved. During these sessions, our educators use vibrant props, puppets, and playful voices to bring narratives to life.

Storytelling does far more than entertain; it acts as a powerful developmental tool that:

- Builds Core Skills: Enhances a child's language, cognitive ability, and communication skills.
- Fosters Connection: Inculcates empathy and encourages positive social interaction.
- Sparks Imagination: Boosts creativity and free-thinking.

And best of all? It teaches our little ones valuable life lessons in the most fun, memorable way possible.

The Curriculum Compass: Guiding Early Excellence

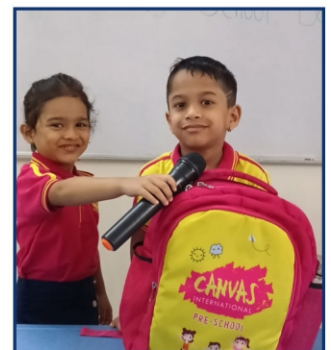

The first quarter across our foundational classes has been a whirlwind of active discovery, wrapped around our favorite philosophy: Learning by Doing! Through immersive, inquiry-based themes like The World Around Us, Marvellous Me, I am Special, and I Like Me, our little explorers stepped away from rote learning and dived straight into real-world experiences.

Here is how we turned big ideas into hands-on fun this quarter:

- The Ultimate Human Machine: Our children became mini-scientists, mapping out their body parts, testing their five senses in interactive sensory labs, and discovering the amazing ways their bodies work every single day.
- Nature Detectives: Early scientific curiosity sparked as children learned to observe, sort, and classify the living and non-living world around them, figuring out exactly what living things need to grow up big and strong.
- Foodie Adventures: We explored foods and flavours, learned why our bodies need healthy nutrition to fuel our energy, and discovered that not everything tastes the same!

- Independence & My "Hygiene Friends": From a smooth, happy transition away from home to mastering structured daily routines, our toddlers embraced self-care, personal cleanliness, and the joy of making positive choices.
- Language, Culture & Feelings: Alongside core foundations in English, Math, and Hindi, our youngest learners played with early speech sounds and free-expression scribbling. We also explored emotional awareness and practiced the beautiful, respectful ways we greet people.
- By transforming abstract concepts into tangible discoveries, this quarter has beautifully ignited curiosity, smashed developmental milestones, and set a joyful tone for the rest of the year!

World Health Day:

Our Canvins turned World Health Day into an exciting day of hands-on discovery across our branches. Our Playgroup children started with the basics of wellness through a vibrant, hands-on healthy eating activity, while the Nursery class learned about the heart and used real stethoscopes to listen to their own heartbeats. Meanwhile, our older kids jumped into deeper science—the Collaborators became little mixologists to brew their own "Magic Health Tea," and the Creators class mapped out the human anatomy to discover major organs and where they are situated in the body. By blending sensory exploration with health education, our facilitators made wellness an unforgettable adventure for everyone!

English Language Day:

Was an absolute blast, with all our classes deeply involved in unique, age-appropriate language adventures. Right from our Infant Community, children honed their sound discrimination and recognition skills—the vital first steps for literacy. Our Inquirers class went on a hunt to find different objects and identify their initial sounds, while the Collaborators class confidently expressed themselves through lively show-and-tell activities. Meanwhile, our oldest Creators class was completely engrossed in the magic of building and making up their own imaginative stories. It was a beautiful display of how active, playful exploration builds confident communicators!

World Heritage Day:

Our celebration brought the rich tapestry of our roots right into our classrooms through beautiful, hands-on connections. Our Playgroup and Nursery children discovered one of India's greatest treasures—our spices! Using aromatic ingredients like turmeric and cinnamon, they created gorgeous greeting cards, filling the air with scents and bringing the sensory exploration at the heart of our philosophy to life. Meanwhile, our Collaborators and Creators classes jumped into architectural history by beautifully decorating jharokhas, honouring a stunning core element of our historical monuments. To tie it all together, we also celebrated our spoken heritage, teaching the children that our native languages are a vital part of who we are, fostering a deep respect for the words that connect our past to our future.

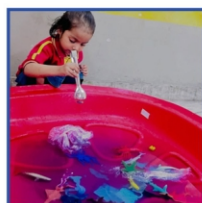

World Safety Day:

On World Safety Day, we focused on crucial phases of self and environmental awareness, including structured, sensitive sessions on understanding good and bad touch and recognizing what feels comfortable. Utilizing approved teaching aids, our Playgroup kids practiced positive peer interactions by learning how to use "kind hands." The Nursery class explored outer safety by learning essential traffic rules, while our Collaborators created personal safety cards to carry with them at all times. Finally, the Creators class practiced empathy and quick thinking by learning exactly how to help a friend who gets a "boo-boo." It was an empowering day centered on safety, care, and mutual respect!

World Earth Day:

To truly respect Mother Earth, our little Canvins must first understand her beauty. This Earth Day, our campuses transformed into vibrant discovery labs. Connecting with the magic of rain, the children crafted their own rain sound shakers, while the Inquirers class stepped outdoors to explore textures by tracing the bark of old trees. Meanwhile, the Collaborators class harnessed the sunshine to create beautiful leaf sun prints on paper, and the Creators class engineered natural water filters using charcoal, pebbles, and cotton. It was a wonderful, sensory-rich celebration of learning by doing!

International Dance Day:

Brought an explosion of rhythm to our campuses, with children engaging in beautifully age-appropriate movement. Our Infant Community fell in love with rhythm while dancing with colourful ribbons, while the Nursery class built coordination through delightful mirror dancing. Moving into creative spatial awareness, the Collaborators class captivated everyone with an innovative shadow dance, and our energetic Creators class brought pure coordination to life by jumping, hopping, and navigating across vibrant floor colours. It was a spectacular day of active energy and creative expression!

Fire Fighter's Day:

Days like Firefighters' Day provide a perfect opportunity to help our children build essential life skills, disaster management awareness, and active "Brain Boss" executive functions for unforeseen circumstances. Our little Canvins from different campuses had the thrilling experience of meeting real-world firefighters, learning firsthand how they boldly work with fire. Back in the classroom, our students worked collaboratively with their teachers to map out actionable escape plans in case of a fire breakout, and wrapped up the experience by engineering their very own cardboard fire trucks. It was an empowering, unforgettable day that stays with them forever!

Mud Day:

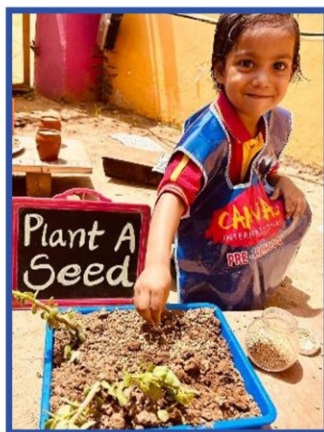

As schools reopen, the best way to help children reconnect with hands-on learning is to ground them in pure joy. To kick off the year, our little ones celebrated Mud Day, diving hands-first into a sensory-rich, experiential adventure.

Armed with nothing but earth, water, and boundless imagination, our young creators set to work. The school grounds transformed into a bustling open-air studio where children sculpted everything from miniature kitchen utensils and sturdy bridges to friendly mud monsters and vibrant mud art.

It was an absolute joy to watch them explore how mere mud can be transformed in so many incredible ways, proving that every muddy path leads straight to fun. Beyond the laughs and messy clothes, this muddy masterclass was a brilliant exercise in sensory integration and fine motor skills, setting the perfect, high-energy tone for the exciting academic journey ahead!

Mother's Day:

Mother's Day was a profoundly emotional and joyous celebration across our campuses, dedicated to honouring the strongest anchors in our children's lives. From infancy through toddlerhood and the preschool years, a mother remains that irreplaceable "go-to" person who feels like an extension of the child themselves. To celebrate this beautiful, unbreakable bond, our little Canvins welcomed their mothers to campus for a day filled with laughter, interactive games, and heart-warming bonding activities. It was a beautiful reminder of the love that grounds our children as they grow and explore the world.

The PEP Series: Nurturing Growth Through the Parent Enhancement Plan

At Canvas International, we have always believed that when parents and educators grow together, our children thrive. With this beautiful vision in mind, the Canvas Head Office proudly launched the PEP (Parent Enhancement Plan) Series-a dedicated initiative designed to empower, enrich, and support our incredible parent community.

Bringing this vital conversation straight to our community's screens, the series took the exciting form of an interactive live talk show right on our Instagram page, @canvasinternationalschool.

Designed as a deep, engaging dive into the journey of raising a child, this talk show tactfully addressed the everyday essentials and subtle intricacies of early childhood development. We dedicated intentional time to decoding child psychology, sharing heart-centered strategies to handle behavioural milestones with empathy and replace everyday labels with a deeper understanding of a child's underlying needs.

The live conversations shifted seamlessly toward holistic growth, shedding light on pediatric nutrition and the science of healthy development. We explored the creative art of "food magic," offering practical, stress-free ways to make wholesome nutrition an exciting, joyful experience for young children.

Rather than a formal presentation, the Parent Enhancement Plan functioned as a vibrant, interactive sanctuary where parents could connect in real time. By exploring everything from early sensory integration to fostering emotional resilience at home, the PEP Series live broadcasts have beautifully bridged the gap between early childhood wisdom and everyday parenting-leaving our Canvas family feeling deeply connected, inspired, and thoroughly equipped to nurture happy, confident lifelong learners.
